Crop Too Big For Railways To Handle

Company Doing Their Best To Move The Crop Says Cameron

That the railways are doing everything humanly possible to cope with the car shortage and that conditions have materially improved during the last two weeks, was the statement made on Saturday by J. R. Cameron, assistant general manager of the Canadian Northern Railway, who paid a brief visit to Saskatoon last week-end.

"It is difficult for the farmers to appreciate the difficulties we are up against, and a great deal of criticism directed against the railroads is founded on insufficient data," said Mr. Cameron.

"The elevators already have more wheat standing at their doors than they can handle and the cars are beginning to back up westward waiting for their turn to discharge their freights."

According to Mr. Cameron, the difficulty that the roads have to contend with is that the crop has so far exceeded all expectations that no traffic department in the world could haul the crop so as to meet with the approval of everybody.

"If we had gone round last spring and asked the farmers how many cars they would require this fall we should have been told that five or six would have sufficed in places where now from fifteen to twenty are demanded. Not even the greatest optimist could have predicted that the crop would have been of the proportions it has turned out to be, and yet little allowance is made because the

Thresher's Liens

In a letter recently sent by J. Bruce Walker, Commissioner of Immigration, in answer to an enquiry re Government Relief Liens and Thresher's Liens, he said:—

"While it is quite true that the Dominion Government lien comes before all claims upon the crop, it is not intended to bar the thresherman's lien for threshing expenses. This letter will serve to show that the thresherman's lien for wages and threshing should be paid out of the first sales of grain, leaving the payment of the indebtedness to the Government to follow immediately thereafter. I take it, and and the elevator men should take it, as unreasonable to expect that the thresherman should be compelled to await payment of their just dues until other claims are met, for if the thresherman do not thresh, how can the other claims be met?"

Across the Andes

The following account of a trip from Valparaiso, Chile, to the West coast of South America, to Buenos Ayres on the East coast of South America, was written by Mr. R. V. Winders, one of the party who made the trip.

To begin, the distance from Valparaiso to Buenos Ayres overland is 900 miles, and takes four days to travel; by sea via the Straits of Magellan, it is 3,500 miles and the passage takes from 11 to 12 days via the Pacific Steam Navigation Co.'s steamers, so you see the Overland Route has the advantage of 7 or 8 days.

On the 8th of November 1890 I left Valparaiso to cross the Andes, exactly one week after the passes through the Cordilleros had been pronounced fit to travel through, and myself and about 50 others booked through to Buenos Ayres by the Compañia Expresso Transandino. Leaving Valparaiso by train at 7.45 a.m. we arrived at a station called Los Andes at 11.20 a.m. This station is the terminus of the Chilean State Railway, and is also the terminus of the Ferre-Carril Transandino, Clark. We left Los Andes at 1 p.m. for Salto del Soldado, the translation of which is "The Soldiers Leap." This railway has been built, as most all other big enterprises in the South American Republics, by an English Syndicate, and is nothing more nor less than a miniature railway; the locomotives are very small, and the cars, one cannot call them coaches, are quite different from ours. They are just a flat car without sides, and the passenger sits on forms four abreast facing the engine exactly as they do on an English street car.

After hours of most uncomfortable riding, we arrived at Salto, which is the end of the railway at present, although the road has been graded for the track, and the mountains pierced, but owing to some difference between the Chilean and Argentine Governments, they have not been able as yet to connect up. We now got in to coaches, each drawn by six horses, and started for Juneau, and during the journey we passed through some of the most romantic scenery it has ever been my lot to witness.

We arrived at Juneau at 7 p.m. after a splendid three hours' drive, and so ended our first day's journey. The place is situated on the side of the Aconcagua mountain, which I believe I am right in saying, is the loftiest peak in the Andes. There are a few wooden shanties, and an hotel, (spelt with a very small "h") When we asked to be shown our room we were informed, to our surprise, that it only contained one room, and that was the one we were in. I should think it would be something like 100 ft. long by 50 ft. wide; at one end was a bar at which one had to stand to get one's meals, as there were neither tables nor chairs in the place. Down each side of this place was a bench elevated about two feet from the floor and extending back from the walls about six feet, and on these were mattresses placed side by side all the way down. This was our sleeping accommodation, neither bedclothes nor anything else to cover us, nothing but our ponchos and the clothes we stood in. Sleep was out of the question, for there were Germans, Italians, Greeks and Chinese, and also two or three other nationalities at the bar all night, and by the noise they made it seemed like Bedlam. However, their revelry was brought to a sudden close by the Chief Guide or Arriero coming into the room shortly after midnight saying that everyone must be ready as we would start at one o'clock to cross the Cordillero or peak, and so get into Argentine territory. Continued in next week's issue

Moved by Denton that the Municipality grant to ratepayers who have enlisted for active service, the taxes for the year in which they enlisted and up to the end of 1918.

Moved by Hoover that Mr. Pyle be paid $2.00 for burning weeds in Weed Inspector Longheed's division, same to be deducted from salary due to him.

Moved by Hoover that Sec'y-Treas. be authorized to appoint an agent to collect arrears of taxes by distress, and that the cost of collecting, amounting to ten per cent, be added to the tax arrears of ratepayers served with distress notices.—Carried.

Motion of Baker. That council adjourn so that the meeting of ratepayers might be held.—C.

At the meeting of ratepayers the question of school assessments was discussed, and a recommendation made, that the Sec'y-Treasurer of the school districts should make their estimates sufficiently large to cover the cost incurred by the Municipality in their efforts to thinne the schools. The large amount of school tax arrears carried on the books of the Municipality has made the work and expense of finatching school districts outreach all ordinary proportions and it is felt that this expense should be borne by the school districts that are delinquent in their tax payments.

On the resumption of Council business it was decided on motion of Coun. Denton that the nomination of Councillors be held in the Council room, Sibbald, on Monday, the 6th, of November at 2 p.m. That W. Linklater be Returning Officer.

The following Polling places were named by the Council with their Deputies in case of an election.
